SUBJECT:

AMATEUR RADIO LICENSE PLATE

- D. The applicant must be a Florida resident and submit a copy of their valid amateur radio station license issued by the Federal Communications Commission.

Recently, the Federal Communications Commission discontinued mailing paper licenses to amateur radio applicants and licensees. Applicants and licensees may now retrieve a reference copy of their license by visiting <http://wireless.fcc.gov/uls/index.htm?job=home>. From this webpage, select the "SEARCH LICENSES" button. This will bring up a dialog box where you can conduct a license search by selecting "By Call Sign" from the dropdown menu. Then enter your call sign and click Search. Once the search populates, choose your licensee/applicant record by name, then click the blue call sign in the margin to the left. This will bring up your amateur radio record. Click on the "Reference Copy" link at the top of the page. This will bring up a copy of your license, which you can open and print or save. Additionally, you may click the "Printable Page" link at the top of the page, which will display your license information for printing.

NOTE: When a new amateur radio license has been issued by the Federal Communications Commission indicating a new call sign has been issued, the applicant must submit an application and all documents required as if it was the first time applying. When the new application is processed, credit is allowed on the old license plate and additional fees are collected.
